Global City and Cosmopolitanism I

Lecturer: Ma Ran

A man with dark hair and a beard is shown in profile, looking out over a cityscape at dusk. The city is illuminated by the warm light of the setting sun, with a prominent building and a roller coaster visible in the distance. The man is wearing a dark jacket. The background is a mix of the city's lights and the blue and orange hues of the twilight sky.

"Tokyo has no nationality"

Yamamoto is often quoted as saying that he designed for women that were powerful in the sense that they didn't have to rely on their appearance or flaunt their femininity. Instead, they could take loose, draped garments and be confident enough to make them look as chic as a YSL gown.

He also pushed against concepts of perfection, and this is because his work was based on the Japanese principle of 'wabi-sabi', a concept which believes that beauty lies in imperfection.

Global Culture & Global City

Featherstone, Mike. "Global Culture: An Introduction", Theory, Culture & Society, June 1990, No.7: 1-14

According to Featherstone, "global culture" should be approached in terms of processes, as "the globalization of culture":

1) cultural integration & cultural disintegration processes taking place not only on an inter-state level but processes which transcend the state-society unit and can therefore be held to occur on a trans-national or trans-society level---"third cultures"

2) postmodernism: defining global culture less in terms of alleged homogenizing processes (Americanization, mass consumer culture etc.) and more in terms of the diversity, variety and richness of popular and local discourses, codes and practices which resist and play-back systemicity and order.

Since the 1960s, understandings of globalization have highlighted asymmetry

3) global ecumene :

ecumene:

the inhabited or civilized world

[OED]

Globalization has created a global ecumene – a global commons

[Excerpted from Hannerz, “The Global Ecumene,” in Cultural Complexity: Studies in the Social Organization of Meaning, Columbia, 1992]

"a region of persistent culture interaction and exchange"; a process whereby a series of cultural flows produce a) both "cultural homogeneity and cultural disorder"; and b) transnational cultures as genuine "third cultures" (Featherstone)

global/world cities

cities in which the global financial and banking services and culture industries are concentrated. But global cultural centres whether of the traditional type or new forms of popular culture industries do not necessarily correspond to economic and political centres. (Hannerz)

The image features two large, green, L-shaped brackets on the left and right sides, framing the central text. The brackets are composed of a vertical bar and a horizontal bar, both in a solid green color.

Context for the emergence of Global Cities:

With the partial unbundling or at least weakening of the national as a spatial unit due to privatization and deregulation and the associated strengthening of globalization come conditions for the ascendance of other spatial units or scales. Among these are the sub-national, notably cities and regions; crossborder regions encompassing two or more sub-national entities; and supra-national entities, i.e. global digitalized markets and free trade blocs. The dynamics and processes that get territorialized at these diverse scales can in principle be regional, national or global.

a single global city is unimaginable; there exists a series of transnational networks of cities

"The growth of networked cross-border dynamics among global cities includes a broad range of domains: political, cultural, social, and criminal."

world city (a type of city we have seen for centuries; old colonial centers) is not necessarily global city

cosmopolitanism in context

Hannerz, Ulf. "Cosmopolitans and Locals in World Culture". In Global Culture: Nationalism, Globalization, and Modernity: a Theory, Culture & Society Special Issue, Mike Featherstone ed.

London: Sage Publications, 1996.

cosmopolitan-local distinction

cosmopolitanism vis-a-vis localism cosmopolitanism as "a perspective, a state of mind, or---to take a more precessual view--a mode of managing meaning"

an orientation, a willingness to engage with the Other. It is an intellectual and aesthetic stance of openness toward divergent cultural experiences, a search for contrasts rather than uniformity.

a matter of competence, of both a generalized and a more specialized kind. There is the aspect of a state of readiness, a personal ability to make one's way into other cultures, through listening, looking, intuiting and reflecting. "a built-up skill" in manoeuvring more or less expertly with a particular system of meanings and meaningful forms.

play of mastery and surrender:

the cosmopolitan's surrender to the alien culture implies personal autonomy vis-a-vis the culture where he originated.

"He possesses it, it does not possess him"

varieties of mobility

varieties of mobility

"being on the move" is not enough to turn one into a cosmopolitan: are travelers ("home-plus"), exiles (experience forced upon him/her), labour migrants, expatriates cosmopolitans (more related to the transnational cultures)?

cosmopolitans tend to immerse themselves in other cultures; they want to be participants; they want to be able to sneak backstage rather than being confined to the frontstage areas.

cosmopolitanism & power

But what about a situation where these conditions are not available—a situation where “divergent cultural experiences” are not freely chosen but forced on us, as they are under colonialism? What form of “openness” should we cultivate then, and would this constitute a cosmopolitan stance or a compradorist one? Could cosmopolitanism be one version of “cultural imperialism”?

compradore

A native-born agent in China and certain other Asian countries formerly employed by a foreign business to serve as a collaborator or intermediary in commercial transactions.
